Perhans there two forgot that it was spring, and that it spring there is a moon a cool and lovely, silver moon—whose light touches common cabbage flowers in the shadow of long grass and makes them look like fallen stars. Perhaps these two forgot the warmth of the sum in spring his long, young kiss as he takes his bride the world—into his attins on their wedding day. Or perhaps they forgot the little, you perhaps they forgot the little, and the sum in spring his long young kiss as he takes his bride the world—into his attins on their wedding day. Or perhaps they forgot the little, you perhaps they forgot the little, and the history work in the birth of her roses and peonies, daisies and clover. Everything everything, dreamy with love! And this wise man and wiser woman who, only some twenty years before, had dreamed their dream with all the rest, had sent their son from them one wonderful June day on "a business trip,"

To wait till you can raise all the money to get that better grade Coat, Suit, Dress, Hat or Furs. It's first as tough to let it stay in the will call till paid for. It would be easy enough if one could content one's self with the cheap stuff, but when one's taste runs toward the higher grade merchandise, such as I carry, it's often impossible. Not so if you deal at Mrs. Miller's Millinery Shop, at 236 S. Main St. near Linden. I carry a large stock of the better grades of Ladies' Ready-to-Wear of the same good quality and style as the other high-grade shops, and at about the same prices, but where I shine is on the terms. No straining to raise the money, no waiting till the goods are paid for: I am just as anxious to trust you as I am to sell you. I'll willingly and gladly extend you credit without the usual red tape, reference or investigation, and a little each week, month or every two weeks on your bill will be entirely satisfactory here. are now on file in our state department. I was not writing a book at that time, but, I felt obliged to secure some public recognition for Bedri's work. I therefore sent his photograph, with a few words about his achievement, to the New York Times, which published it in a Sunday edition. That a great American newspaper had recognized him in this way delighted Redri beyond words. For months he carried in his pocket the page of the Times containing his picture, showing it to all his friends. This court ended my troubles with the prefect of police, for the rest of my stay we had very few serious clashes. Tslaat had himself given the order for closing all the institutions and that job finished before 9 o'clock. I have aiready said that the Turks have a sense of humor; but to this statement already said that the Turks have a sense of himor; but to this statement I should add that it sometimes manifests itself in a perverted form. Bedri now seemed to think that locking more than 76 Catholic sisters in two rooms and turning 200 young and carefully nuttured girls into the streets of Constantinople was a great joke.

"We were going at it early in the morning and have it all over before you heard anything about it," he said with a laugh. "But you seem never to be asleep."

"You are very foolish to try to also."

"We were going at it early in the morning and have it all over before you heard anything about it," he said with a laugh. "But you seem never to be asleep."

"You are very foelish to try to play such tricks on us," I said. "Don't you know that I am going to write a book? If you go on behaving this way I shall put you in as the villain."

This remark was an inspiration of the moment, it was then that these experiences might prove sufficiently interesting for publicution. Bedri took the statement seriously, and it seemed to have a sobering effect.

"Bo you really intend to write a beok?" he asked, almost anxiously with the statement and the seemed to have a sobering effect.

After I had remonstrated over this indecent haste Talaat told Bedet to suspend the order until we had had a chance to talk the matter over Naturally this greatly relieved More Elvira and the sisters. Just as we were about to leave, Bedri suddenly had a new idea. There was one detail which he had apparently forgotten.

"We'll leave the Sion States alone for the present," he said, "but we must get their money.

As some of the windows of the convent opened on the court of the cathedral, which was vatican property, we contended that the Turkish government could not setse it. Such of the sisters as were neutrals were allowed to remain in possession of the part that fared the vatican land, while the rest of the building was turned into an engineers school. We arranged that the French usus should have 10 days to leave for their own country, they all reached their destination safely, and most are at present engaged in charities and war werk in France. My locular statement that I intended to write a book deeply impressed Bedri, and, in the next fest weeks, he repentedly referred to it. I kept banteringly telling him, that inflows his behavior improved, I should be forced to picture him as the villam. One day he asked me, in all seriousless, whether he could not do something that would instity me it portraying him in a more favorable light.
